It is with great sadness that we inform you of the death of the late Archbishop Daniel Bohan's mother, Rita, who died peacefully on Monday, January 9th. As we remember the anniversary of the passing of her son, Archbishop Daniel, almost a year ago, let us pray that the love which bound mother and son together so deeply in this life may know its fullness in being united with Father, Son and Holy Spirit in God's heavenly Kingdom. May she rest in peace and rise in glory to see the face of God.

Please pray for the repose of Rita's soul and for comfort and consolation for all her family.

In loving memory of Archbishop Daniel Bohan...

Do You Have Scars?

This morning I had the chance to host the Assiniboia Church Ministers Association meeting. While waiting for the other ministers, am recollecting what happened to me last Christmas break and shared later in the group during the reporting.

More than my writing or preaching, I think one of the greatest things I've ever done for others is to share my scars to them. It gives people hope that they too can be healed and change their life.

It's like the vegetables I eat. (Be patient with my analogy.)

My friend tells me I'm like a goat. Because on weekends, he sees me munching on raw salad. Specifically, raw green "organic" vegetables. Here's something you may not know about organic: Their physical appearance won't be perfect. They'll have pockmarks. Flaws. Blemishes. Why? Because they don't have insecticides to protect them from bugs. Some people who don't know this will choose the "perfect" veggies. The ones with no defects. No wounds. No scars. A pity. Because their perfection is fake. They don't have scars because they're covered with a truckload of chemicals. A few of them may even be poisonous. They keep out the enemy, but they also make the veggie very unhealthy. You know what? I've met people who don't seem to have any defects. No scars on the outside. At least, they make it appear as if they have no scars. But it's not true. Their real scar is their pretending to have no scars. It makes them inorganic. It makes them plastic. Dear friend, give hope.

Share your scars to others.
