Pope Francis issued the Mitis Iudex Dominus Iesus ("The Lord Jesus, the Gentle Judge"), which reforms the annulment process. This document was prepared, at Pope Francis's direction, by a group of legal experts at the Vatican. The document contains an introduction explaining the pope's actions followed by a set of canons that replace the sections on annulments in the Code of Canon Law. Appended to the document is a set of procedural rules explaining to bishops (and others) how the new processes are to work. Pope Francis did this out of a desire to make the annulment process more efficient. In many parts of the world, the process has been notoriously slow and difficult. It could take many years to get a ruling.

A great number of bishops in the 2014 synod for the Family, emphasized the need to make the procedure in cases of nullity more accessible and less time-consuming, and, if possible, at no expense.
⇒ They proposed, among others, the dispensation of the requirement of second instance for confirming sentences; the possibility of establishing an administrative means under the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop; and a simple process to be used in cases where nullity is clearly evident.

The new document seeks to make the annulment process more accessible and less time-consuming.
⇒ It does not require the process to be free of charge (dioceses need to pay the people who work on these cases, and in some cases that means paying a fee to partially cover the costs), but the procedural norms attached to the documents do call for the costs to be minimized.
⇒ Here are some situations where the new, shorter process can be used.
lack of faith resulting in the simulation of consent to be married or an error that determines the will regarding one of the requirements of marriage the brevity of married life (i.e., the couple divorced very quickly after being married) procured abortion to prevent procreation (presumably during the marriage itself) the stubborn persistence in an extramarital affair at the time of the wedding or at a time immediately following the malicious concealment of:

infertility
a serious contagious disease children born from a previous relationship an incarceration
a reason for getting married that is completely foreign to married life (presumably something like entering a legal fiction of a marriage to be able to immigrate or gain an inheritance) or consisting of the unplanned pregnancy of the woman the physical violence inflicted to extort the consent to marry the lack of use of reason proved by medical documents
*For a more comprehensive understanding, you can read the Pope's Mitis Iudex Dominus Iesus.*
