June 5: World Environment Day

Adapting to climate change in Bolivia. The Indigenous Uru people of Bolivia were once dependent on Lake Poopo for their livelihoods, but since the lake dried up, many from the community have had to leave. Thanks to a training program offered by the Centre for Ecology and Indigenous Peoples (CEPA) and that is supported by Development and Peace, citizens are getting involved in rebuilding efforts and protecting their natural environment. The community is also encouraging the local government to develop alternative economic activities so people can stay. *Theological Reflection: Corpus Christi Sunday on the 2nd Reading
(Heb 9,11-15) The Eternal Sacrifice*

▷ These verses from Hebrews continued to put forth one of the themes from the letter: the eternal high priesthood of Jesus Christ. While the Letter to the Hebrews cannot be dated exactly, we can assume the letter was written after the fall of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. Sensing a loss in his Jewish Christian audience, the author could have used the theme of divine high priesthood to comfort his audience. But, by developing this theme, he was also pointing the way to the understanding Christians had for their own worship (found most clearly in Revelations). The earthly community gathered around the heavenly worship of Christ.

As Christ offered himself to the Father (beginning on the cross), he entered into the heavenly "Holies of Holies." Notice, place also pointed to the time frame. As locale of Calvary became transcendent and universal, the one time death of Jesus on the cross became eternal. This is the import of the phrase, "once and for all," unlike the ongoing sacrifice system in the Temple (to which the author compared the death of Christ).

As the priest, the place, and the activity of Christ's turned the particular into the universal and eternal, the result led to the transcendent. Christians, would receive an eternal inheritance and forever serve the living God. They would turn away from our dead works (notice the word "dead" not only referred to the useless, selfish nature of the acts; the word also paralleled the Jewish notion that foreign idols were "dead," unlike the living God of the Jews; in other words, sin is an act of idolatry). Faith in God allowed them to partake in the heavenly, eternal self-giving of the Christ.

From this point, we can see Christians would soon view their worship as a participation in the worship Jesus gave to the Father. Their self-giving became his. Their prayer and his prayer became one.

▷ When we worship at Mass on Sunday, let us remember the view point of Hebrews. When we pray and share communion, we become one with Christ as he worships the Father. Fr. Dennis Remot
